Wednesday of last week, the ex-President, after presacing his declarations with the siter presents his declarations with the statement; hat he had hoped to remain silent on the subject referred to, says that if he might only consider his personal desires and his individual ease and confort his response would be promptly made and without the least reservation or difficulty.

This is taken to mean that if the matter were merely personal Mr. Cleveland would refuse to allow his name to go before the Convention.

refuse to allow his name to go before the Convention.

"But," he adds, "if you are right in supposing that the subject is related to a duty I owe to the country and to my party, a condition exists which makes such private and personal considerations entirely irrelevant."

This latter declaration was said to-day by ex-secretary of the Treasury Fairchild and other of the ex-President's ardent admirers to be an acceptance pure and simple.

In his letter Mr. Cleveland also says that he cannot "regard a candidacy for the place as something to be won by personal strife and active self-assertion," and, further en. "My conception of the nature of the Presidential office and my conviction that the voters should be free in the selection of their candidates, preclude the possibility of tay leading and pushing a self-seeking canvass for the Presidential nomination, even if I had a desire to be again a candidate."
